

A Breath of Fresh Air

Nothing is off limits in this traditional home—a 1936 Georgian—where a young family enjoys every room, even the ones outdoors.

BY LACEY HOWARD
PHOTOGRAPHY BY EMILY MINTON REDFIELD

When Jason and Jennifer Cherveney purchased their Denver Country Club home, Jennifer was very pregnant with the couple's fourth child (the three others were all under the age of six), and family-friendly design was an urgent priority. The traditional home they chose is a textbook example of Georgian architecture—formal living and

The 1936 Georgian home (right, top) is classical in design and its additions respect the original architecture. Landscape designer Annie Hamilton echoed the home's classic symmetry with paired plantings. The entry (right) is located in the center of the house with a formal room to each side and a neoclassical staircase leading to the second floor.